Faith with Reason By Paul Helm

Paul Helm investigates what religious faith is and what makes it reasonable. While religious beliefs need to stand up to philosophical scrutiny just like other beliefs, religious epistemology must respect the distinctiveness of their subject-matter. Helm argues that the reasonableness of faith depends not only on beliefs about the world but also on beliefs about oneself and on what one is willing to trust.

Editorial Review

Review

`Review from previous edition Faith with Reason is an excellent book, especially unique and recommendable because of the balanced way in which both the cognitive and the non-cognitive elements playing a role in religious belief and its justification are treated ... Issues concerning the relation between faith and reason seem to be rather well-worn during centuries of theological and philosophical inquiry. In his new book, however, Paul Helm succeeds in giving a remarkably fresh ring to some of them.'

Ars Disputandi

`yet another welcome contribution to one of the liveliest debates in contemporary philosophy of religion ... The style is simple, lucid and well-ordered. The arguments are persuasive, the criticisms of other views perceptive and fair ... This book will commend itself to many different kinds of readers. Students will find it easily accessible, refreshingly free of jargon and unnecessary technicalities, well focused on the key issues. Professional philosophers in the field will find in it original arguments, and a freshness of approach to some well-worn issues.'

Gerard J. Hughes, Religious Studies

`contains a lot of sophisticated, intelligent, and subtle guidance around the subject ... Helm's exploration of the role of one's moral standing when it comes to questions of belief and reasonableness is particularly successful.'

Brian Davies, TLS

`Helm is one of the most articulate and sensible of contemporary philosophers of religion, and writes clearly and without pretension.'

Hugo Meynell, The Heythrop Journal
